1 These two columns are Roboto Serif and Roboto Sans Flex set at the same sizes top to bottom on each page, with pages, like this, shown in the pdf, for each of the wghts 300, 400, 500 and 700.

To me, in this 300 wght, the bottom 4 lines of each look a lot alike, the next four up are pretty close, and then the top is quite different.
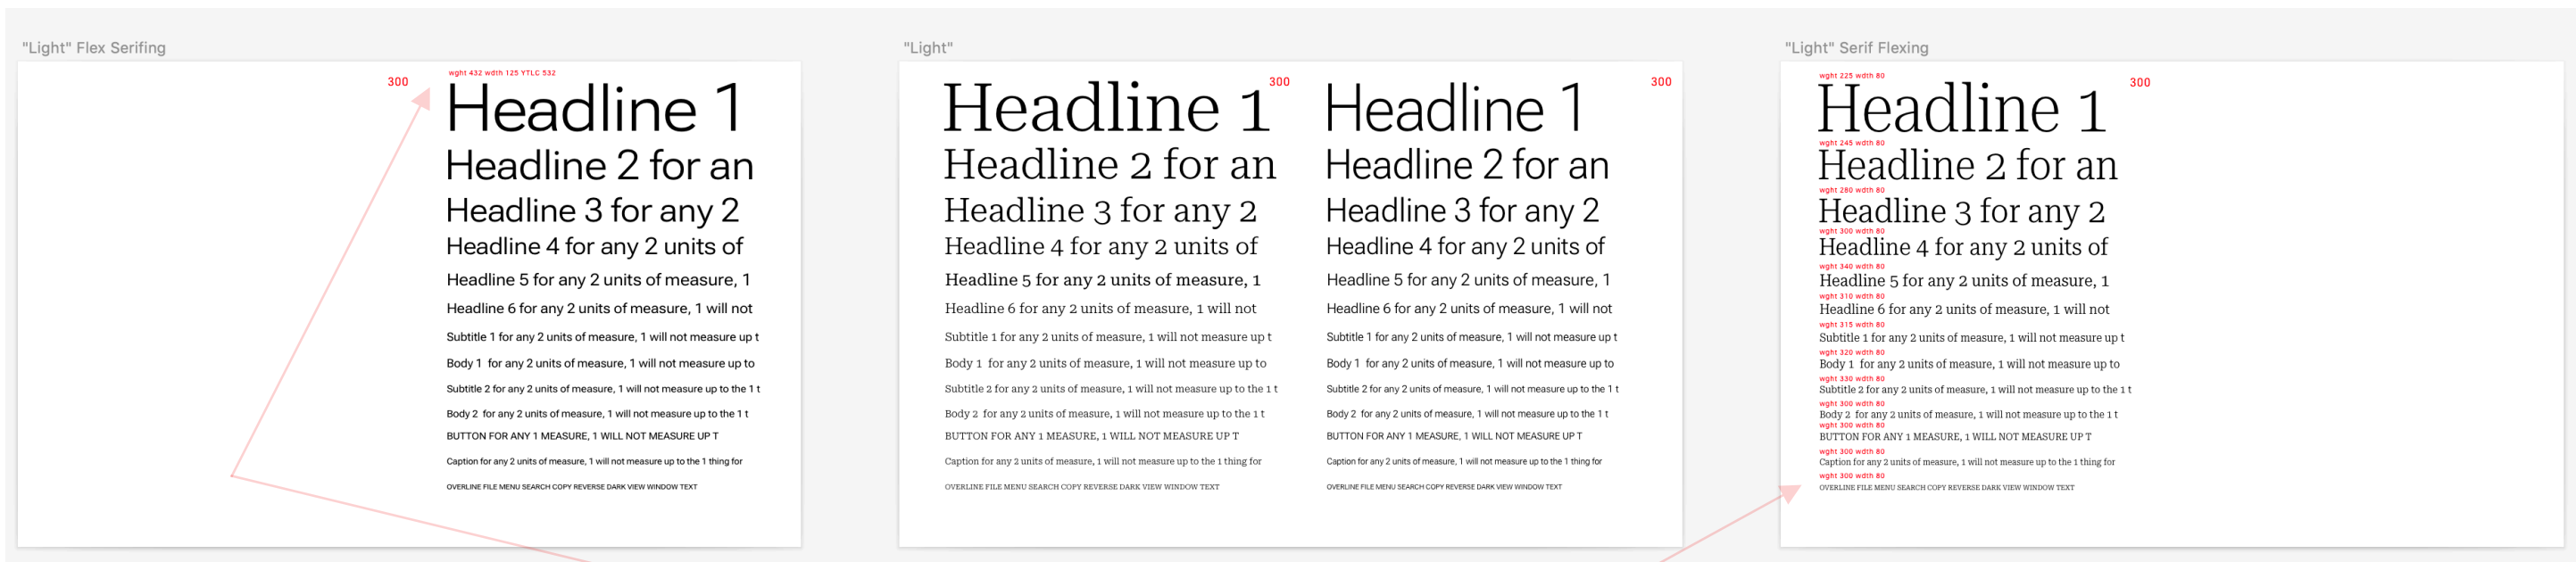

2 This Column, including one for each wght on succeeding pages show use of Roboto Flex's wght and wdth axes to match the width and weight appearance of Google Serif, and using the custom XTRA axis, the lowercase height is increased to match as well.

3 This Column, including one for each wght on succeeding pages show Roboto Serif using its wght and wdth axes to meet the width and weight appearance of Roboto Flex. Roboto Serif has no XTRA axis, but otherwise the metrics and color are compatible.

4 The numbers along the column's edge reflect the designspace delta from, in this case the wght300, wdth100 style of each opsz.

In the left example, one delta was used for all the sizes, while on the right, a variety of deltas were required over the size range for this wght.

This shows the layout of all the pages of weights with sample bi-directional designspace deltas approximated.
